I am against adopting any California style rules in Maine. Mainer's do not have the disposable income that Californians do (nor the disillusionment that electric is actually a viable solution) and we will end up in a situation like we had the last time we tried to force emission laws, they got voted back out by citizen initiatives and the state wasted millions building facilities. Maine's rural land doesn't allow for electric vehicles, especially logging in the woods. Regardless this needs to be a citizens initiative, not something dumped upon us like everything else handed down we then have to remove ourselves.

As a Maine my whole life I have never heard anyone other than the people living in cities supporting overreaching California laws.
